TAKE YOUR PICTURE?

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

These days, we seldom think about our ability to take a picture of anything we choose, using whatever the most modern technology provides as a way to record our memories, travel events and everyday happenings. This wasn't always the case, however.

In the 1700s - early 1800s, if you wanted a family picture for remembrance, it would have been difficult to find this service available in the Richfield Springs area. Starting in the late 1800s, there were several photography studios in the village from which to choose. Summer visitors were their best customers and photographers had also developed the ability to take scenic pictures of the area. We are grateful to them for providing us with a visual history of the area in its early years.

By the early 1900s, 'new-fangled' cameras that could be used by the general public had been developed and were carried by our local pharmacies and stores. One of the first to appear locally was the brand made by the AnSCO Company, a manufacturer with an ever changing history of failure and success.

The company was founded in 1842 as E. (Edward) Anthony & Co. It was America's first producer of daguerreotype plates used in early photography and marketed photographic equipment and hand cameras long before Eastman Kodak. The company merged with Scoville Manufacturing which was originally a brass producer. As the photographic market grew, the company expanded its operations to include manufacturing metal plates and supplies.

Apparently, George Eastman, being ambitious, was not content with selling another company's wares (he had previously served as a distributor for the Anthony plates) and began producing his own cameras opening a chain of stores exclusively featuring Eastman Kodak products, buying out independent suppliers.

In an effort to stay competitive, Anthony purchased the Goodwin Film & Camera Company in 1901 and began manufacturing something new for this industry. Hannibal Goodwin, an Episcopal priest, had invented a transparent film roll that served as a substitute for cumbersome glass plates.

Shortly thereafter, this company merged with Scoville Manufacturing in an effort to combat Eastman's market monopoly. The company name was changed to AnSCO and moved its base of operations to Binghamton, New York. Because of a 1902 judgement of five million dollars awarded to AnSCO for patent infringement by Eastman, the company had the capital needed to survive.

In 1928, AnSCO merged with Germany's Agfa. This strengthened the company in the lower-end camera market. The new company was honored for the production of infrared film but after the United States entered World War II, AgfaAnSCO was seized because of its German corporate connection. Camera production was replaced by wartime film and optical equipment but was later referred to the Office of Alien Property Custodian. In 1944, the name of the company reverted back to AnSCO for obvious reasons. It was under United States government supervision for more than twenty years. Like many other companies, AnSCO produced bomb fuses, sextants, rangefinders, films, cameras, airplane instruments and other products for the U.S. war effort. In the 1960s, a new headquarters was constructed in Vestal, New York.

Unfortunately, the post-war years still brought troubles to AnSCO as it continued to place second behind Eastman Kodak. By 1978, the trademark no longer existed as such when the company was sold to a Hong Kong enterprise which later made cameras under the Anso Photo-Optical Products Corp. division. The last AnSCO cameras were produced in the early 1990s.

Photography as a new hobby and obsession, fell into two categories - amateurs taking snapshots and professionals who worked with large view cameras in studios. AnSCO produced cameras for both groups.

Since these were usually a one-time purchase for the average customer, the market was limited. The money to be made came from purchases in the form of film processing, prints, and more film after the camera had been purchased.

Locally, the AnSCO products were advertised as being sold in the pharmacies and stores of: Crowe & Bigelow (1916); J. Jordon Black (1924); A. J. Victory & Son Variety (1950); Ehrmann's (1958) and Kitts (1970).

In spite of all its difficulties, AnSCO remained as an impressive company for nearly a century and there were many pictures taken locally by both residents and visitors with their 'new-fangled' AnSCO cameras.

Governor Hochul's State of the State Silent on Older New Yorkers and Caregivers

Statement by Becky Preve, Executive Director of the Association on Aging in New York State

Contact: becky@agingny.org "Aside from the outstanding performance of the 'Timeless Torches,' once again the State of the State ignores the many needs and challenges faced by older New Yorkers. This is a repeating theme and speaks to the lack of commitment for older residents, and the issue of ageism in society. In fact, although New York State is home to 4.84 million older individuals, and has 4.1 million caregivers, the State of the State's massive briefing book almost entirely ignores the challenges older New Yorkers face, even after aging services experts spent two years working on a Master Plan for Aging, a Master Plan that was an Executive Order issued by Governor Hochul."

"Despite the fact that those age 50 and older represent 36 percent of the state's population, the New York State Office for the Aging's (NYSOFA) Budget represents a scant 8/10th's of 1 percent of the State Budget, and this lack of funding continues to impoverish and institutionalize older residents."

"According to NYSOFA's first ever statewide needs assessment survey, 75 percent of older New Yorkers consider themselves 'healthy/very healthy, active and engaged.' Many are still working and plan on continuing to work into their mid-70's. Thousands volunteer for not-for profits, and their economic and social contributions are well documented and unmistakable."

"While the State of the State is silent on older adults and their caregivers, we are hopeful that the State Budget will not be. We cannot continue to allow thousands of older New Yorkers and caregivers to languish on waiting lists for a hot home delivered meal, a shower, or transportation to chemotherapy while we highlight work being done on equity and affordability. The state of the state largely focused on families, yet did not acknowledge that older individuals are also members of families. We applaud universal child care, and free nutrition in public schools, but equity includes the same lens and funding for older residents needing respite and meals."

Here are the facts:

- Older New Yorkers contribute $719 billion (43 percent) to the states GDP;
- Their spending supports almost 6 million jobs.
- They generate $482 billion in wages and salary,
- $72 billion (41 percent) of state and local taxes.
- More than 4.1 million New Yorkers provide uncompensated care to someone else, most of which are older adults caring for older adults, with an economic value if paid for at the market rate of $39 billion.

"I raise all the amazing and impactful contributions of older adults, as it speaks to why we must support the older New Yorkers who do develop needs as they age. Older individuals have overwhelmingly provided the economic backbone of NYS, yet there is a continued refusal to fund services that may become necessary to support aging in place. Services through New York State Office for the Aging show amazing return on investment, save hundreds of millions of dollars to Medicaid, and more importantly, show respect and provide dignity to Older New Yorkers and families"

Becky Preve is the Executive Director of the Association on Aging in New York, a not-for-profit membership organization that supports the 59 Area Agencies on Aging. The mission of the Association is to support and enhance the capacity of New York's local providers to work in collaboration with the aging network to promote independence, preserve dignity, and advocate on behalf of aging New Yorkers and families. ➡
