Community Volunteer

One of Van Hornesville's earliest 19th Century mill buildings has endured well into the 21st Century.

But now, with the apparent conclusion of the stone grist mill's nearly 200-year career producing feed for area farm animals, community members are considering what its next chapter should be.

"I believe it should be preserved somehow because it's part of what Van Hornesville is, in my opinion," said Rick Bronner, who retired in 2020 after several decades as general manager of the Van Hornesville Milk Producers Co-op, which operated the mill.

"It's a shame it couldn't stay as a feed mill," he added. "The building is in great shape. It really is."

But while the building is structurally sound, it could need substantial renovations if it is to be made suitable for a different use.

The mill property is owned by the Van Hornesville Community Corp., a non-profit educational and charitable corporation founded by benefactor Owen D. Young in 1938. The VHCC is hosting two weekend "community conversations" on May 3 and May 4 to hear and discuss ideas for future use of the mill, millpond and other community assets owned by the corporation.

The mill ceased operation around 2022 amid pandemic disruptions to the feed industry and changing farm economics. It is the first time local farmers have gone without a local feed supplier in many generations.

Milling in Van Hornesville has its roots in a sharp-eyed discovery by two enterprising New Jersey soldiers who passed through the area during the Revolutionary War and noticed the potential of water power on a section of the Otsquago Creek in what is now the southeast corner of Herkimer County.

Abram Van Horne and his cousin returned after the war and built the first feed mill for surrounding farmers in 1793, according to accounts published in a 1989 issue of the Herkimer County Historical Society's Legacy magazine.

According to the Legacy account, the current mill was built on the site in 1836 by Daniel Van Horne — though a carved stone above the front door bears the initials D.V.H. and a date of 1833.

Farmers from earlier settlements on higher ground surrounding Van Hornesville — known then as Pumpkin Hook, The Chyle and The Squawk — welcomed the arrival of the first Van Horne grist mill and its successor to grind their grain into feed for their livestock.

The 1833 (or 1836) mill operated on water power until 1961, when it was converted to electricity.

One of the Van Hornesville mill building's recent fans is a relatively new community resident, Susan R. Williams, whose home overlooks the historic structure. The fact that she and her husband settled here in their retirement years involved a touch of serendipity.

Williams's academic subjects of doctoral study included vernacular architecture, which she describes as the study of "ordinary buildings," and the history of technology.

"The two of those converge in that building," she noted.

The Van Hornesville mill is modeled on a design invented by American engineer and businessman Oliver

Evans, Williams said. Evans was a pioneer of industrial innovation and developed a milling process called "vertical integration," which moves the grain to a top level, directs it down through a series of tubes and chutes as it is ground, and brings the finished feed to the bottom, where it is bagged and carted away.

"This was very innovative, but not unusual for this region," Williams said. "This is just a beautiful, well-preserved example. ... That mill has a lot of potential, both for its historical significance as something that transformed industrial production of grain and also because it was the engine that drove the economy of Van Hornesville."

LAWN & GARDEN

Cultivate An Herb Garden

Many people cultivate gardens both inside and outside of their homes with a focus on adding aesthetic appeal to their property. But a garden that boasts plants that are edible and pleasing to the eye is a possibility as well. Planting an herb garden is a creative way to enjoy the sights, smells and tastes of a wide variety of plants. Using fresh-harvested herbs in culinary endeavors imparts a taste that dried spices cannot match. What's more, fresh herbs are often easy to cultivate.

Herbs are versatile, capable of lending great flavor to foods while also playing different roles in personal health and beauty. Herbs can be grown to perfume homes and bodies. There are herbs that are also purported to help with ailments, from upset stomachs to anxiety.

When planting an herb garden, you may want to pay particular attention to the types of flavors and smells you like in your home and cooking. This will help you to narrow down the types of herbs you will plant. Many would-be herb gardeners tend to start small to see what luck they have when cultivating herbs. Fortunately, herbs can grow well in containers indoors, provided the soil is amenable and there is plenty of sunlight.

Herbs will grow best in well-prepared soil. Make sure that it is rich in organic matter and drains well. Also, for plants like parsley, be sure to have deep pots or dig deeply in the garden to establish long taproots.

Until the weather warms up, you may want to begin herb cultivation indoors and then transfer plants outside during the summer. Basil, for instance, is a tropical plant that does well in warm conditions. Therefore, it will need to be kept away from drafts and get several hours of direct sunshine a day. Place most herb planters in a south-facing window of a home to ensure they get ample sunlight and to allow the soil to dry adequately between waterings. With many herbs, leaf production will diminish on any stems that flower. It is essential to pinch off flowers that form to encourage the herb plant to continue producing leaves, which are the parts of the plant most associated with seasoning and aroma.

Weed out gardening myths from facts

Gardening is an age-old activity that was once a necessity but has transformed into a hobby for thousands of people. While gardening still serves practical purposes, many gardeners still consider it a hobby first and foremost. Time-tested gardening techniques have prevailed, but there remain certain myths about gardening that are best dispelled. The following are some of the more common myths associated with gardening.

• MYTH: Compost tea is more effective than traditional compost. All over North America and the United Kingdom, gardeners have jumped on board the compost tea bandwagon. Compost tea is a fertilizer created by steeping compost in water mixed with sugar in brewing kits. The mixture is allowed to sit and aerate to encourage beneficial organism growth before it is sprayed on plants. According to supporters, compost tea suppresses disease and boosts plant yields. However, there is no evidence to suggest that compost tea works any better than adding compost in its normal state to the soil. In fact, leaving buckets of the "tea" around to ferment could actually create a breeding ground for E coli and other bacteria.

• MYTH: Plants under stress should be fertilized. This is not the case. Horticulturists advise that fertilizing plants that are not deficient in nutrients can actually add to existing stress levels for plants. Plants are not often stressed by a lack of food, but rather heat, faulty planting or space constraints. A fed plant will use the energy to absorb the nutrients instead of defending against a blight or establishing better root systems.

• MYTH: Young trees need stakes. It may be tempting to stake that little sapling to protect it against the weather and strong winds, but doing so may actually work against the founding tree. Staking trees to inhibit swaying may not stimulate the tree to grow thicker, lower trunks that will help the tree in the long run. The Royal Horticultural Society recommends that saplings be staked for around one year and then have the stakes removed to encourage the tree to be strong and stable on its own.

• MYTH: Water droplets and sunshine lead to burnt leaves. Gardeners have been told to resist watering their plants during the hottest times of the day. Many assume it's because water droplets lying on leaves will magnify the sun's rays and burn the leaves. According to Dr. Gabor Horvath at the Eoetvoes University in Budapest, water droplets will rarely damage plants because the drops are too close to the leaves to cause burning before they evaporate. Watering during the hottest points of the day is not advised because water evaporates and gets wasted.

• MYTH: Sand added to clay soil makes it looser and better for plants. Clay soil is a deterrent to gardening because it can be so hard to dig and difficult to cultivate, but some feel it's best to add sand to the clay to make it a better soil mixture. You would need a great deal of sand to do this in the right manner, but many gardeners simply dig a hole, add sand and hope for the best. However, water runoff will pool in the sand and not be absorbed by the clay, potentially causing the plants to drown.

• MYTH: Adding compost or potting soil to the planting hole for a tree or shrub is beneficial. Gardeners frequently add compost or potting soil to the hole where the root ball of a tree or shrub will be placed. But this encourages the roots to grow only in this nutrient-rich area, rather than spreading throughout the landscape to form a stronger and more durable root system. If you are going to amend the soil, do so evenly across the landscape.

• MYTH: Use gravel or rocks in the bottom of planting containers to improve drainage. Rocks and gravel can actually impede the growth of plants and take away space for roots to grow. The drainage may be affected as well, as water will sit above the gravel or stones and saturate the roots. Stick with plain soil for better drainage results.

A variety of gardening myths still prevail. Over time, behaviors can be changed if gardeners learn to separate myths from facts. GT144073

LAWN & GARDEN

Introduce earthworms into the garden

Gardeners eager to revitalize their lawns and gardens may spend hundreds of dollars on tools and products designed to improve soil and growing conditions. Although many of these items can be advantageous, gardeners also may want to look to nature's best garden helpers: earthworms. It is believed that nearly 3,000 different types of earthworms inhabit the planet. Worms have been around for hundreds of millions of years. Worms can be seen as bait dangling on fishing lines or as meals for red-breasted robins. But these subterranean dwellers play their biggest role beneath the soil.

Earthworms move through dirt as they search for food. The worms consume particles in the soil, helping to recycle materials like dead leaves, plant parts, decaying animals, and feces. Through their travels, worms also serve to aerate the soil. Worms bring the subsoil closer to the surface and mix it with the topsoil. Earthworms' castings also help naturally fertilize the areas in which they reside. The slimy mucus that worms leave behind contains nitrogen, which also helps to amend the soil.

The University of Illinois Extension says most earthworms found, particularly in North America, can only grow so long, even though some worms seem like they stretch forever underneath the ground. Depending on the type of worm and how many segments it has, as well as its age and ability to get nutritious foods, worms typically reach only a few inches in length, offers National Geographic. There are some anomalies, however. The Oregon giant earthworm is one of the largest earthworms found in North America, growing to more than three feet in length. That worm is very rare, however. In 2016, a 16-inch-long earthworm was discovered in England and became part of the collection at the Natural History Museum in London. Some Australian and South American earthworms are known to grow much larger.

Worms need the correct mix of oxygen, moisture and favorable temperatures to survive. If they do not have these components, they will seek them out elsewhere.

Because of the many benefits earthworms provide, they can be a boon to landscapes. GT184922

A Healthy Pet Is a Happy Pet.

You love your pet, so make sure he stays safe and healthy all year round. How?

- Take a note of your pet's behavior when healthy. This will make it much easier to recognize when your pet is acting strangely – a strong indication that he is sick.
- Keep your pet's vaccinations up-to-date.
- Don't leave pets unattended in the car, even with the windows down.

LOOKING FOR AN AFFORDABLE USED CAR?
SICK OF BUYING rusty junk off of an individual or online and then spending more than you paid for it trying to get it functional or to pass inspection? At Central Auto Sales I take pride in buying quality cars that are still in excellent condition that can supply you with many miles of service in the future. I typically buy my cars from states south of NY to avoid the rust associated with local cars. I have a nice selection of cars in the affordable $4-6K range, most are low miles or low miles for the age. I'm a lifetime resident of Norwich. Buy from someone local. No pressure, no fancy hype, just quality cars at fair prices! Central Auto Sales LLC, 429 Manley Road, Norwich. www.centralautosalesllc.com 607-336-6371.
