A VICTORIAN EASTER

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

We seldom think about how our holiday traditions developed or their origins. The Easter season is a good example of how they were defined centuries ago.

The name Easter is believed to have originated from the term ‘Eostre’, a pagan Germanic goddess who was celebrated around the time of spring. Eggs and rabbits were seen as symbols of birth and rebirth during that time and were used as a way of representing Eostre. It was the Christians who first made Easter a religious celebration that focused on the resurrection of Jesus Christ after His crucifixion.

The Tudors who held the English throne from 1485 to 1603, didn’t celebrate the event in the same way that we now do and, in fact, some of the customs that have become traditional to us today, were discouraged or banned. Lent was seen as the major occasion instead of a celebration of spring. Before Victoria became Queen of England in 1837, the country enforced historical Puritanical bans on celebrations. Once she became queen, the bans were lifted, allowing people to create new traditions, many of which have survived to this day. Easter Sunday became more of a festive celebration and time of remembrance and hope after Lent.

For example, in 1840, the uniform one-penny postage rate meant that cards could be sent more economically to keep in touch with family and friends, especially at Easter. Cards often featured symbolic Christian images or symbols of spring such as lambs and bunnies, printed on brightly colored paper, emphasizing the happy nature of spring.

Eggs have long been a symbol of birth. Children would often dye eggs using beets, cranberries, lemon peel, oranges or onion peel (for terracotta brown), a spoonful of aniline dye (for magenta), or ebony black could be achieved by boiling the egg in a mixture of rye and water. Commercial egg dyes were available in 1897 and became very popular. Egg dishes were a part of the Easter meal in order not to waste eggs found during the children’s egg hunts. The tradition of the hunt and egg roll was introduced from Germany. During the early Victoria era, cardboard eggs were often lines with bits of satin and contained sweet treats. Chocolate eggs were introduced by chocolatier John Cadbury who brought them to the public in 1842. In 1875, his company released the Cadbury Cream Egg - still a very popular treat. A very unique variety of fashionable Easter egg appeared in 1893, made of plain, hinged wood that opened to reveal a interior bursting with rosebuds, violets and other spring flowers.

Marketing of commercial egg dyes had a great influence on the creation of the Easter Bunny. Many of the German immigrants to this country had brought the tale of the Easter hare along with them to their new country and soon, chocolate bunnies and cards featuring rabbits appeared. It was never questioned by little ones how the Easter hare could lay all those colored eggs and hide them to be found and enjoyed! By the way, when not on his rounds, the Ester bunny is said to live on Easter Island in the southeastern Pacific.

Easter meals were also a popular Victorian tradition. They often consisted of lamb or ham and vegetable dishes along with buns and Easter breads. Simmel cake was a favorite - a light fruit cake with eleven marzipan balls on top representing the disciples, excluding Judas who betrayed Jesus to the Romans. Oysters, clams, scalloped potatoes and fruits were also features of this special meal.

Who could forget the popular jelly beans? The history of their beginning is obscure but some have said that they existed since 1861 when Boston confectioner William Schrafft urged people to buy jelly beans as gifts for soldiers in the Civil War. By the early 1900s, they were a common penny candy. The inside is made of sugar, corn syrup and starch. The coating is a sugaring technique called panning which is coating the center with layers of sugar syrup. The jelly bean wasn’t associated with Easter until during the 1930s. It became popular then because of its egg shape and many colors. The flavor possibilities seem to be endless.

Easter would not be complete without the mention of the Easter parades and hats. These, too, had their origin in the Victorian era when the ladies, after attending Easter services, were known to stroll along Fifth Avenue in New York City, showing off their spring finery, including elaborate chapeaus. After the forty day period of fasting and reflection, Christian people welcomed the coming of spring and Easter by wearing new clothes in bright colors. They put on their ‘Sunday best’. In the United States, the idea of specifically designed Easter bonnets became a tradition after the Civil War. A ‘Sunday of Joy’ was held the first Easter after the war and national mourning ended. People wanted to celebrate renewal of their lives and expressed this joy by wearing decorated hats. According to the Ladies Home Journal of 1889, appropriate trimmings for your Easter bonnet were flowers and feathers, gold and silver braid, stately aigrettes which included gems entwined in egret feathers, all in colors of white, yellow, gold and all heliotrope shades. The more elaborate, the better. A beau might give a pair of gloves to his sweetheart and if she wore them during the parade, it was considered an announcement that she had accepted his proposal.

This was not a special time to be celebrated only by those in the city or those of greater financial worth. The citizens of Richfield kept the Easter traditions. They attended churches for special services where there was an abundance of special music, lilies and other spring flowers.

It was reported in 1900 that a cold wave on Easter Sunday put a damper on the many Easter bonnets. Perhaps a new hat was purchased at Mrs. W. T. Watson’s establishment in Schuyler Lake, who had just returned from the city with a complete line of millinery goods. You were invited to call and see her Easter hats. Or, if you chose, the Cary Sisters at the Waiontha Hotel were showing their exclusive styles in trimmed hats and bonnets with materials advertised as not being left over as unsalable in other towns but were the best and latest from the best New York houses. Miss Cary had spent three weeks in the city previous to Easter and would give her personal attention to all orders.

Ads appeared that year for Goodale’s Grocery Store where strawberries, pineapples, oranges, maple sugar and syrup, bushels of eggs, clams, oysters, onions, sweet potatoes, celery, asparagus and tomatoes were special offers. S. H. Conklin, the Cash Store, offered a choice of one dozen eggs or one-half dozen navel oranges free with one dollar in trade. With purchases of three dollars, you would be given two dozen eggs or one dozen navel oranges for free. With five dollars of trade, you would receive, free, three dozen fresh eggs or two dozen California navel oranges.

Greenman’s offered Easter novelties as did M. A. Walter, jeweler and optician, who had Easter novelties in sterling silver. The Gladstone Bookstore offered a beautiful line of Easter cards and novelties.

New clothes for the occasion? Bargain were offered at M. Tuller & Son where gent’s neck ware was at fifty cents and the new style Derby hats were on display. Ladies’ kid gloves in all of the latest shades could be had for $1.25. Shoes were most important if you wanted to join the Easter Parade and a new stock had just arrived at Hinds & Caney.

Flowers for decoration at church or at home could be purchased at several places including Mr. Wardwell’s greenhouse. White Easter lilies symbolized the purity of Christ to Christians. Their growth from dormant bulbs in the ground to flowers, symbolized the rebirth and hope of Christ’s resurrection. Native to Japan, they were brought to England in 1777 but didn’t become popular in the States until after World War I when they became the unofficial flower of Easter celebrations.

If you weren’t too tired from all the preparations and celebrations, you were invited to attend the Easter Ball held by the Rector’s Aid Society of St. John’s on the first Tuesday following Easter Sunday. There was a concert and supper followed by dancing.

Whether you choose to include all of the traditions of the past or start new ones of your own in celebrating Easter, take time to remember the ‘Reason for the Season’.

CAR CARE

What to do when your vehicle breaks down

Knowing what to do when a car breaks down can make such unfortunate situations much less stressful for drivers. Smartphones and wifi networks may make it less stressful to cope with broken down vehicles. However, wifi networks are not always accessible in remote locations, so drivers would be wise to revisit these tips for handling broken down vehicles in advance of their next road trip.

- Turn on hazard lights. Hazard lights inform other drivers that something is wrong with your vehicle, and the sight of hazard lights typically compels fellow motorists to give drivers a wide berth and facilitate their moving off of the roadway.
- Attempt to get off the highway. After turning on their hazard lights, drivers who know or suspect something is wrong with their vehicles should try to get off the highway. Move into the right-hand lane as soon as possible, ultimately trying to get onto the shoulder. Avoid the left-hand shoulder if possible, as the left lane is a passing lane and motorists likely won't be expecting vehicles in this area of the highway.
- Turn the steering wheel away from the road. Broken down vehicles are unpredictable, and drivers may not have the luxury of pulling over onto flat road surfaces. Turning the steering wheel away from the road prevents it from rolling into traffic if drivers are forced to pull over on an incline.
- Be especially careful before exiting the vehicle. Exiting a broken down vehicle can be very dangerous, especially when drivers are forced to pull over on busy highways. Drivers who have pulled over into the right shoulder should wait to exit the car until there is ample time for them to get out and safely make it to the shoulder. If necessary, crawl across the front seat and exit using the passenger-side door. All passengers should exit the vehicle on the passenger-side if the car has been pulled onto the right shoulder.
- Call for help. Only after they have safely gotten their vehicles off the highway should drivers call for help. Passengers may want to avoid calling until the car is off the road as well, as it can make for faster relief if callers wait until they know their exact location to call for help.
- Set up flares or triangles behind the vehicle. If it's safe to do so, set up flares or triangles behind the vehicle. If the flares or triangles are buried in the trunk, drivers can ask a passenger to serve as lookout and warn them if they need to get away from the vehicle.
- Pop the hood. An opened hood is another indicator that a vehicle is broken down and can be especially valuable to drivers who do not have flares or triangles.
- Wait for help. Do not attempt to fix the vehicle on the side of the highway. Doing so leaves drivers vulnerable to oncoming motorists. FC17A378
